

I am a first time user of XM radio, I'm delighted with the product. When they added traffic info I wondered why commercial radio doesn't add this feature. Rather than dilute XM's service, why not encourage competition. Why would the government play politics with service to its real constituents the listening public, not the broadcasters. If XM has a good idea let the broadcasters get together in each market and add one more station that has traffic and weather 24-7. They can save money by eliminating redundant reports on each station. The FCC can be a leader in encouraging broadcasters to improve their product, not try to legislate mediocrity.
